WIDE DIVERGENCE OF OPINION REGARDING THE CUBAN TREATY

Washington, Feb. 13.—A question of importance in relation to the Cuban interpretation of the reciprocity treaty with that country, which became operative Dec. 27, 1903, has come to the attention of this government. An answer to a telegraphic inquiry from the treasury department has been received by the American minister at Havana to the effect that articles, the product of the soil or industry of the United States, exported to other countries and thence imported into Cuba, will not receive the benefits of the reduced rates of duty provided in the reciprocity treaty. The treaty provides in effect that all articles of merchandise not free of duty, being the product of the soil or industry of the United States, imported into another country and thence into the United states, the only essential fact insisted upon being that the goods admitted shall be "the product of the soil or industry of the United States, exported to other countries and thence imported into another country and thence into the United shall be "the product of the soil or industry" of Cuba. Still another question in connection with the interpretation of the treaty is to which rate of duty shall be assessed against goods brought into the respective countries and in bonded warehouses at the time the treaty went into effect. The treasury department, carrying out the plain letter of the lay on the subject, has held that such goods upon withdrawal pay the reduced rate of duty, while cube soil or industry of the United States, imported into another country and thence into another co the soil or industry of the United States, imported into the republic of placed in the warehouse. ### RUSE RELEASED BOYS

Reform School Inmates Pretend There Was a Fire and Escape in Confusion.

Two boys, inmates of the state industrial school, made their escape last night by working a clever ruse which deceived the guards of the institution. About 9:30 p. m., just after the inmates had retired to bed, William Adams and Fred Rogers jumped up and ran about the dormitory frantically, shouting that the place was on fire. There was a great deal of confusion and while the attaches of the place were looking for the fire and quieting the immates, the two boys slipped away and had not been located at an early hour this morning.
